Profession versus Vocation:

While the terms profession and vocation are often used interchangeably, the following is provided as a general guide when reviewing applications;

A profession is one that is typically earned through a four year or longer course of study at the university level. Examples are: accounting, law, teaching, architecture, nursing*, pharmacy, medicine, finance, the clergy and engineering.

A vocation is generally thought of as requiring a certain amount of physical skill along with technical knowledge. Examples are: pipefitting, sheet metal, machinist, electrician, electronics, HVAC/heating and cooling specialist, auto and diesel mechanic, body and fender specialist, insulator, bricklayer, carpenter, cement mason, insulator, barber, hair stylist, etc. The technical knowledge is normally attained through a trade school or community college. Some trade schools offer a program that exceeds the normal two year degree from a community college.

*nursing at the LPN level, licensed practical nurse, can be accepted as vocational, but the RN, Registered Nurse, should be considered a profession.
